Interested in participating? Click "Next" below to see if you are eligible.

Why participate?

- This annual survey collects information to help us better understand patterns of behavior and well-being among men like you
- Your participation can help ensure public health resources have the greatest positive impact for the community
- We will donate $5 for every completed survey to one of three charities: the Trevor Project, SAGE: Advocacy and Services for LGBT Elders or AIDS United (maximum donation to all charities will be $5000)

Who are we?

- A group of researchers at Emory University

What happens next?

- We will first ask you some questions to find out if you are eligible to participate
- If you are eligible, you will be invited to complete an online survey
- If you are not eligible, we may ask you to provide an email address so we can contact you about future research studies for which you may be eligible. Providing your email address is completely optional

Click the arrow or "Next" button below to be a part of this national effort!

PrEP Interest and Preferences

ID: 543

PrEP stands for pre-exposure prophylaxis. Daily oral PrEP is a pill that a person who is HIV-negative takes every day in order to prevent getting HIV. PrEP is safe, but some people experience side effects like diarrhea, nausea, headache, fatigue, and stomach pain. These side effects usually go away over time. You have to see a doctor or other healthcare provider to start daily oral PrEP and go back for check-ups once every 3 months to stay on it. Studies have shown that daily oral PrEP provides about 99% protection against HIV infection when it is taken every day.

A long-acting form of PrEP that is given as an injection in your buttocks once every 2 months has been found to be effective in preventing HIV infection. You would have to see a doctor or healthcare provider to start injectable PrEP and go back for check-ups once every 2 months to stay on it. The possible side effects of injectable PrEP are mild-to-moderate pain at the injection site that lasts 2 to 7 days, mild rash at the injection site that clears up on its own, or a headache that lasts a couple of days after injection. When someone is diagnosed with HIV infection, their doctor usually orders a blood test to get detailed genetic information about the virus itself. This is important because the genetic makeup of viruses tend to change over time. For HIV, these tiny changes can lead to resistance to some HIV medications used to treat it. So, doctors use the detailed genetic information about the virus to pick the best medicine for a patient.

This detailed genetic information about the virus is also sent to public health agencies. Patients are not asked to provide specific consent for doing so. Public health agencies use this information to understand how and where HIV is spreading. This practice, called “molecular HIV surveillance”, helps improve public health surveillance. For example, molecular surveillance allows public health agencies to better see which versions of HIV are in a particular location,
